HIGHLIGHTS

The 1979-80 data indicate:

* a decline of 1.6 percent in the total nonpublic elementary and secondary school enrollments from 406,485 in 1978-79 to 399,955 in 1979-80.

* a decline of 1.4 percent in nonpublic elementary school enrollments from 289,630 in 1978-79 to 285,514 in 1979-80.

* a decrease of 2.1 percent in nonpublic secondary school enrollments from 116,855 in 1978-79 to 114,441 in 1979-80.

* an increase in the number of nonpublic schools from 1,667 in 1978-79 to 1,779 in 1979-80.

* that of the 1,779 nonpublic schools, 1,289 were elementary schools, 183 were secondary and 307 were combined elementary-secondary.

* that the Roman Catholic Church operated 923 schools or 51.9 percent of the nonpublic schools, and that 80.9 percent of the nonpublic pupils or 323,452 were enrolled in these schools.

* that the enrollment in Roman Catholic schools declined by 3.3 percent from 334,653 pupils in 1978-79 to 323,452 pupils in 1979-80.

* that the enrollment in nonpublic nonCatholic schools increased 6.5 percent from 71,832 pupils in 1978-79 to 76,503 pupils in 1979-80.

* that a total of 21,114.4 full-time equivalent teachers staffed the 1,779 nonpublic elementary, secondary and combined schools.

* that 16.9 percent of the 2,368,756 elementary and secondary school children in the Commonwealth were enrolled in nonpublic schools.

* that 59.1 percent of the 26,038 nonpublic secondary school graduates were reported as attending degree-granting institutions.

FOREWORD

The series of publications entitled Our Schools Today is designed to provide statistical data and trends relating to basic education in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The "Nonpublic Elementary-Secondary School Report" is Number 4 of Volume XIX in this series. Other issues in the series, published either annually or biennially, provide data on transportation of students, public elementary and secondary education, public school buildings, public school professional personnel and public school financial statistics.

Any inquiries relative to these publications, including suggestions for change, should be directed to the Division of Education Statistics, Bureau of Planning and Education Statistics, Department of Education, 333 Market Street, Harrisburg, PA 17126 (Phone 717-787-2644).

INTRODUCTION

The Nonpublic Elementary-Secondary School Report, 1979-80 presents current nonpublic enrollment and graduate data for all cooperating nonpublic schools in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Included among these nonpublic schools are sectarian and nonsectarian schools that operate an educational program that consists of varying organizational arrangements of kindergarten through grade 12; including elementary exceptional, secondary exceptional and post-graduate programs.

There are several tables in this report that classify the enrollment and graduate data into various categories. In addition to the tables, the data are further supported by the use of trend tables for the past decade, graphs and interpretive narrative.

NONPUBLIC ENROLLMENT DATA

The changing nonpublic school environment in Pennsylvania may appear, especially to an outside observer, to be a paradox. This apparent paradox is created by established statistical data that show the enrollment to be decreasing and yet, the number of nonpublic schools to be increasing.

This phenomenon begs explanation, especially in light of the changes occurring in the public school sector of the Commonwealth's educational environment. In particular, in Pennsylvania, since 1970-71 public school enrollment has declined by 395,016, or 16.7 percent. This decline was accompanied by a decline in the number of schools from 4,507 in 1970-71 to 3,805 in 1979-80; this is a 15.6 percent decline. Part of the decrease in the number of public schools is reflected in the closing of old and smaller schools, and opening of new and larger facilities. Nonetheless, in the public sector at least, the decrease in the number of students is mirrored by the decrease in the number of schools. An assessment of the numbers of nonpublic pupils and schools for the ten-year period beginning in 1970-71 can provide a succinct explanation for this paradox.

Data reported for the 1979-80 school year show that 8 out of 10 children attending a nonpublic school were enrolled in a school operated by the Roman Catholic Church and only 2 out of 10 children were attending nonCatholic nonpublic schools. Corresponding figures for the 1970-71 school year show 9 out of 10 children enrolled in a Catholic school and only 1 in 10 enrolled in a nonCatholic school. On the surface, these figures do not indicate much of a change in these proportions. However, this change does represent a 31.2 percent decrease in enrollment in Roman Catholic schools, and on the other hand, it represents a 63.9 percent increase in nonCatholic nonpublic school enrollment. In terms of numbers of pupils, Roman Catholic school enrollment dropped by 147,026 pupils as compared to a 29,830 increase in nonCatholic school enrollment.

Despite the large attrition experienced by Roman Catholic schools, the number of schools operated under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church has not decreased proportionately (1,075 reported in 1970-71 versus 922 reported in 1979-80). What has occurred was a decrease in the average number of pupils per school. To put this idea in perspective, in the 1970-71 school year the average number of pupils per school was 438. In ten years this figure dropped to 351 pupils per school. The explanation of the paradox becomes strikingly clear when similar data for the nonpublic nonCatholic segment are examined. Data for the 1970-71 school year show a per school enrollment figure of 90 pupils. Ten years later the same statistic was 90 pupils per school. In contrast to the Roman Catholic enrollment decrease, which appeared principally as a decrease in the pupils per school ratio, the nonCatholic enrollment increase was evidently absorbed by an increase in the number of new schools as opposed to an increase in the number of pupils per school. Over the past ten years, the net result of these changes has created a climate where the number of nonpublic schools has increased yet the enrollment of nonpublic schools has significantly decreased.

Aside from the changes in the Catholic and nonCatholic entities of the nonpublic education environment, other less subtle changes occurred. The initial observation is a decrease in the total nonpublic school enrollment reported for 1979-80. The 1.6 percent decrease in enrollment represents 6,530 fewer students than 1978-79. The major portion of the decrease occurred in nonpublic schools in Allegheny and Philadelphia counties, where a net loss of 1,877 pupils in Allegheny and 3,135 pupils in Philadelphia was recorded. The data show a net loss of enrollment in 28 other counties. A total of 34 counties showed an increase in nonpublic school enrollment. The interesting item in these statistics is that of the 34 counties showing an increase, 21 of the counties had fewer than 1,000 nonpublic school pupils.

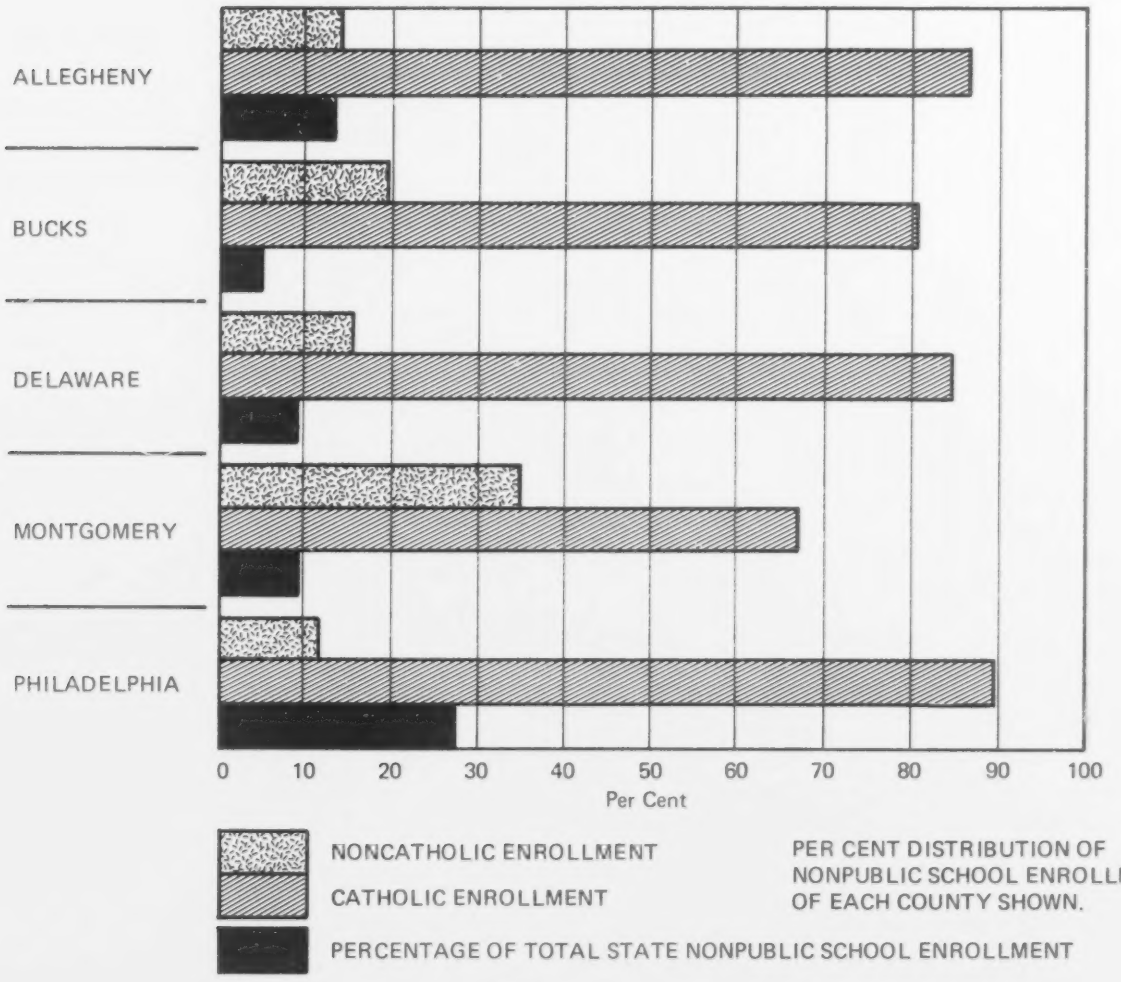
PER CENT COMPOSITION OF THE NONPUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENT IN THE FIVE COUNTIES WITH THE LARGEST NONPUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENT, 1979-80



By way of comparison, 42 counties showed an increase in the number of nonpublic schools; however, only 17 of these counties had fewer than 1,000 pupils. The indication here is that small schools are beginning operation in virtually all segments of the Commonwealth. However, the fact that 17 of 21 counties whose nonpublic school enrollment is less than 1,000 also showed an increase in the number of nonpublic schools seems to indicate that much of the activity associated with new nonpublic school openings is occurring in rural Pennsylvania. This indication appears to complement the theme established in preceding paragraphs concerning the increase in the number of nonpublic schools.

The nonpublic school enrollment in the five counties of Allegheny, Bucks, Delaware, Montgomery and Philadelphia accounts for 62.9 percent of the total nonpublic school enrollment. It is interesting to note that 64.9 percent of the total Roman Catholic enrollment is also accounted for in these five counties.

Of these five counties only one county, Bucks, showed an increase in nonpublic school enrollment. In contrast, four of these counties showed an increase in the number of nonpublic schools; the exception being Allegheny county, where six fewer schools were reported for the 1979-80 school year. The net result of these changes shows that 35.8 percent of the 112 new nonpublic schools reported in Pennsylvania were located in these five counties. The net loss in enrollment in these five counties amounted to 6,128 students. Again, these net changes reinforce the theme established in earlier paragraphs concerning the increase in the number of nonpublic schools despite a decrease in nonpublic school enrollment.

NONPUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES

Since 1970 the number of students graduated from nonpublic high schools decreased 17.8 percent from 31,676 in 1970 to 26,038 in 1979. The decrease since last year equaled 176 or 0.7 percent. As indicated in table 17 the largest class of the decade graduated in 1970.

There were 241 nonpublic schools with graduating classes. Most of the graduating classes were composed of fewer than 100 graduates. A brief analysis shows that 156 schools or 64.7 percent had fewer than 100 graduates, while 11 schools graduated 500 or more.

Post-high school activities of the nonpublic secondary school graduates are presented in tables 14 through 17. There were 15,388 or 59.1 percent of the 1979 graduates who were reported as matriculating at a degree-granting institution. Of interest are the various pursuits of those graduates not choosing to enter a college, university or other post-secondary degree-granting institution. The military services recruited 451 or 1.7 percent of the 1979 graduates, compared to 2.0 in 1978 and 2.6 percent ten years ago. The largest number of graduates (2,564) not matriculating at a college or university were reported as clerical workers, and 93.5 percent of the graduates in this category were female. Slightly more than 5.3 percent of the graduates were reported as attending other schools. This category includes vocational-technical schools and nondegree-granting schools. The number of graduates seeking a nursing career has continued to decline from a high of 939 in 1971 to 350 in 1979.
